

'16 CAMPAIGN MAY DEPEND ON WILSON'S POWER IN CONGRESS

Success of Legislative Program Is Involved in President's Domination Of It.

HIS PRESTIGE IS AT STAKE

Democratic Leaders Declare Situation Is Improving, and Outlook Is Favorable.

How much influence will President Wilson have with Congress in the coming season?

Is the President's domination over the members of House and Senate in this Congress going to be as great as in the last Congress?

These are questions common enough in Washington at present. As members of Congress arrive for the session, and they are beginning to come with greater frequency, such questions become more and more common.

It is generally realized, by both Democrats and Republicans, that the legislative outcome depends in large degree on how far the President is able to dictate to Congress; on how readily Congress, when told to do anything by the White House, will proceed to do it.

May Weaken President.

Not only is the legislative outcome involved, but the outcome of the campaign next year may depend on the success or failure of the President in getting Congress to do his bidding. It is the view here that if there is strong Democratic insurgency in Congress, and the Administration organization "falls down" in the enactment of the White House legislative program, the prestige of the President will suffer and he will be weakened in 1916.

Senator Root recently predicted in an interview that the Administration ship will be beaten in the House by Democratic votes. He looks for more Democratic insurgency—that is, refusal to line up for Administration measures.

On the other hand, Democratic leaders and southerners, who are in close touch with the Administration, declare the situation is improving for the President and the outlook is favorable for the great bulk of his proposed legislation. They say, in true, regardless of any attempts by William B. Bryan to oppose the program to the limit and to expose the Democratic party to the menace of a split.

Those who are convinced the President once more will dominate Congress and whip it into line, cite two recent "conversions" of prominent Democrats in support of their theory. The "conversion" were in the cases of Senator Kern and Congressman Hay, the one Senate Democratic leader, the other chairman of the House Military Committee.

Insurgency To Be Difficult.

Senator Kern, who has always been known as a Bryan man, after giving out interviews in Indiana of a kind that was calculated to excite the Administration program, came on to Washington, was called in by the President, and then declared he would stand by the President. Chairman Hay was looked on in many quarters as the probably fatal stumbling block to the Administration army bill. Mr. Hay was called to the White House not once but twice and then declared himself a hearty supporter of the program.

Under the circumstances, there is undeniably encouragement for the Administration leaders. As a Bryan man, Mr. Kern might be expected to support the Bryan program instead of the Administration program. But Mr. Kern wants a re-election and he does not dare alienate the Wilson Democrats in Indiana. As for Mr. Hay, he evidently believes the Administration is going to win in the House and he prefers to be on the winning side.

What is true of the national defense program probably will prove true of a good deal of the rest of the Administration legislative program. Unless Democrats of the House beat the merchant marine bill, it is not likely to be passed, and it is not likely to be passed, and it is not likely to be passed.

AMERICAN GIRL SUES HER TURK HUSBAND

Vivid Beauty of Twenty Declares His Religion and Views Are Too Subtle For Her.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 26.—The Orient and the Occident did not harmonize her marriage. Her husband, a Turk, and Mrs. Alice Finch Abdullah, a beautiful American girl, so there is on file an action on her part for divorce, and a petition that her name may be disincorporated to the extent of removing the "Abdullah."

"It wasn't that she smoked a long pipe with a large bowl and had me curled up on a rug at her feet," says Mrs. Abdullah. "He adopted many American ways, but he thought geographically different from me. He never wanted me to go out, not even to see my mother, and of course—"

Mrs. Abdullah, herself, answers the question, "Did she go out?" by merely being herself. That a vivid and beautiful girl of twenty, who admits she could not have been a languorous and maddening Turkish woman, looking at the patterns of the wall paper against her husband's homecoming.

But what really caused the action for divorce, she says, was a tale of her Mohammedan husband. On June 16, 1914, when they had been married about eight months, Abdullah, her husband, told her he had lost his place and would have to leave for Turkey the next day. He said he was a poor man, and she should be satisfied with what he had.

CURTAL PASSPORTS FOR WRITERS OF U. S.

State Department Decides Upon New Policy of Newspaper Men Going to Europe.

The Government of the United States has announced a new policy with respect to passport to American writers who intend to visit the war zone of Europe. It does not propose to have writers get passports and use them for unimportant purposes. The State Department made this announcement:

"The number of newspaper writers who have applied for passports has caused the department to rule that hereafter it will issue passports to writers who contemplate visiting belligerent countries only when they are regularly accredited to the department by responsible journals or recognized press associations."

"The department will not issue passports to individuals who are paid or expect to be paid by the agents of foreign governments for matter which they may publish."

"Before issuing passports to writers the department must be assured that their purposes are of a neutral character."

"The department will not issue passports to writers who contemplate going to the territory of one belligerent to that of the enemy."

"The object of this ruling is to insure the neutrality of the United States and to prevent individuals from putting their safety in jeopardy."

"The department believed that the Archibald case was in part the cause of the new ruling."
